"Lincoln's Arrival at Washington"

A recent addition to the Union Pacific Historical Museum is a reproduction of a painting shown above that portrays Abraham Lincoln making his modest entrance into the national capital prior to his first inauguration. The picture is the gift of Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. It was just about sixteen months following the event it depicts that President Lincoln signed the act creating the Union Pacific Railroad Company, thus authorizing the construction of the first transcontinental line. The original picture was painted by Herbert D. Stitt for the Baltimore and Ohio Magazine.
